“Never be bullied into silence. Never allow yourself to be made a victim. Accept no one’s definition of your life, but define yourself.” - Harvey S. Firestone

You know the story about the alarmist who called for help just to get attention. When he really needed help no one believed him.

This is the quintessential story of a victim mentality that, unfortunately, seems to be widely accepted these days.

When you are following your true path in life, you are accepting responsibility for everything you do. When you need help, it will be there. When you are totally perplexed as to what to do next, but continue to do something to further your aims, help will arrive.

When you are acting in accordance with your true nature, you will never be a victim. Instead, you will gain respect and admiration from unexpected sources that will ensure you have everything you need.
